East Hill Cemetery

-Bud Phillips

There are at least 4000 people buried in East Hill Cemetery.

Some time ago a lady called from Morristown, Tenn., stating that her great-grandmother, whom she did not know, was buried somewhere in the old cemetery. I found the name and section in which she was buried. It is one of the larger sections there. A little later this woman came to Bristol armed with her notebook and camera. She parked her car and began her search. It was a daunting task. I well know that experience. Sometimes you can search for hours without results. This woman patiently searched on and on but did not find her great-grandmother's grave marker. Her mother had told her that there was a small flat marker at the grave. I well know that many such markers become covered over and lost.

Finally the sun set over the western hills. Twilight was coming on. This lady gave up for the day and started back to her car. She heard nothing but had a sudden urge to look back up the hill one more time. She was startled to see a tall gray-haired lady standing beside a low shrub. This lady kept pointing downward toward that shrub. Fascinated, the lady stared at this strange sight.

The tall lady beckoned her to come with one hand but continued to point with the other. Then suddenly, the figure disappeared. At that point most people would have fled the cemetery. But not this lady.

She quickly walked to the shrub and covered by it was the grave marker for which she was searching. After copying what she wanted, she again headed for her car studying much about this strange appearance.

She had noted the figure was dressed in a long pale pink dress. Suddenly her mind clicked. She remembered she had been told her great-grandmother was buried in a long, pale pink dress, her favorite color. She told me that she firmly believed that she had finally been able to see her relative.
